

UDK 342

KATERYNA IVANIVNA DUBOVA

Luhansk State University of Internal Affairs named after E. O. Didorenko

COUNTERACTION TO SEXUAL VIOLENCE (SHORT DISCOURSE)

The violence problem in the society is one of the most important problems of mankind. For a long time people got used to solve problems not peacefully but using the physical force. There are several types of violence, namely: physical, psychological, economic, sexual, etc.

In different countries law enforcement bodies differently warn and stop any facts of violence. Let's give examples of the countries with the low and high level of violence dated 2015. Syria is the country which won the first place among the countries noted by the high level of violence, sexual in particular. The civilian population of this country appeared between the military operations activity and the prolonged conflicts on the front's line. Sexual violence connected with conflicts are considered as a rape of women and girls in wartime. Many countries experience threats of sexual violence, indications about application and consequences of this form of violence are widely documented in 19 countries of Africa, Asia, Europe and South America during 2016. It can be concluded that the most affected by violence countries, namely sexual violence, are countries where the martial law is in force.

Countries in which violence level is considerably smaller, in comparison with other ones, are the European countries. These countries include Iceland, Denmark and Austria. This is due to the fact that in Sweden, for example, virtually all forms, including domestic violence, are criminalized in these countries. As for the children in these countries, the punishment for them is much more severe than for the other forms of violence.

Thus, the urgency of the problem of violence for European countries necessitates the search for optimal models of the response. A number of regulations to regulate violence at the international level have been created. In particular: the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the Declaration of the Rights of the Child, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and the Convention on the Rights of the Child. In order to find the best models of law enforcement response to the facts of violence, one must take into account the experience and psychological aspects of different countries of the world. Analyzing the consequences of actions against violence in different countries of the world, one can conclude which of them are optimal and which can have positive results in the future.

Language adviser N. F. Khairulina